On Wednesday, the Los Angeles Police Department released surveillance video that appeared to show Flores killing his ex-girlfriend, 35-year-old Karen Ruiz, in Pacoima.

Surveillance video released by police appeared to show Flores killing his ex-girlfriend in Pacoima last week.
(Los Angeles Police Department)

The video shows Flores pull up into a driveway behind Ruiz, exit the vehicle and chase after the screaming woman. He fires several shots from a semi-automatic handgun at Ruiz, who is off-camera, before running back to the car, police said. A child can be heard screaming.

Officers responded to the scene around 9:35 a.m. and found Ruiz suffering from multiple gunshot wounds. She was pronounced dead at the scene.

Flores died of a single self-inflicted gunshot wound as police closed in on him, investigators said.

Investigators tracked Flores to Arlington, Texas, where he was seen getting inside a vehicle and driving toward Dallas, police said. Dallas police air and ground units assisted in monitoring Flores' movements until officers could arrive.

Investigators said Flores realized he was being followed and abandoned his vehicle. He walked on foot until he saw marked police cars pull up. Flores then killed himself with one shot from a handgun.

In the wake of last week's deadly riot at the Capitol, Sen. Mark Warner is urging Facebook and other social media giants to preserve "digital evidence" of the chaotic scenes that engulfed the building.

“After Wednesday’s insurrectionist attack on our nation’s Capitol, I’m calling on telecom and social media companies to preserve digital evidence of the Capitol riot,” the Virginia Democrat tweeted on Saturday.

In a letter to Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg, Warner states that “the United States Capitol is now a crime scene.”

“In case you have not already done so, I request that Facebook work to immediately preserve any and all posts, communications, videos and other media, meta-data, cloud backups, and subscriber information, whether currently on your platform or in any backup or archived state, across Facebook, Instagram, and WhatsApp, that may be associated with Wednesday’s insurrectionist attack on the United States Capitol,” Warner, a Democrat from Virginia, wrote.

“We are continuing our ongoing, proactive outreach to law enforcement and have worked to quickly provide responses to valid legal requests,” a Facebook spokesperson told Fox News, via email Sunday. “We are removing content, disabling accounts, and working with law enforcement to protect against direct threats to public safety.”

Images of pro-Trump rioters storming the Capitol Building sent shockwaves around the world. The violence left five people dead, including a Capitol Police officer and sparked a high-tech FBI manhunt for suspects involved in the riot.

Facebook is also in the spotlight over its decision to indefinitely block President Trump’s Facebook and Instagram accounts following his response to the Capitol riot.

In a Facebook post on Thursday, Zuckerberg wrote that “the shocking events of the last 24 hours clearly demonstrate that

“We believe the risks of allowing the President to continue to use our service during this period are simply too great,” he added. “Therefore, we are extending the block we have placed on his Facebook and Instagram accounts indefinitely and for at least the next two weeks until the peaceful transition of power is complete.”

Authorities have arrested two Florida men for stealing the remains of veterans from a local cemetery for ritualistic purposes, according to reports.

Brian Montalvo Tolentino, 43, of Davenport and Juan Burgos Lopez, 39, of Lake Wales were arrested in connection to remains missing from vaults at Mount Dora's Edgewood Cemetery, Lake County authorities said.

The men were charged with four counts of disturbing the contents of a grave and four counts of abuse of a dead human body.

Democrats are moving to remove President Trump from office after Wednesday's U.S. Capitol riot, but George Washington University law professor Jonathan Turley said he doesn't believe Trump committed an impeachable offense.

Turley explained to "Fox & Friends Weekend" that the president's call to protest does not constitute insurrection and that Congress must deliberate carefully on the charges to carry out the process constitutionally. Trump invited supporters to rally in Washington Jan. 6, saying it would be "wild," and gave a speech where he said ralliers would march "peacefully" to the Capitol. During the speech, he repeated the unproven claim that the election was stolen from him.

"The speech itself does not give a clear basis for the charges of insurrection or incitement,” he said. “The president talks about his followers marching on Congress peacefully... He does not call for riots. He does not call for violence.”

JONATHAN TURLEY: TRUMP’S LEGACY ‘IN TATTERS’ AFTER SUPPORTERS RIOT AT CAPITOL

In a recent op-ed with The Hill, Turley argued that even though he disagrees with the president’s comments and called them reckless, swift impeachment could be harmful to the Constitution.

“With seeking his removal for incitement, Democrats would gut not only the impeachment standard but also free speech, all in a mad rush to remove Trump just days before his term ends,” he states.

Turley said the U.S. Supreme Court would be likely to define Trump’s remarks as constitutionally protected free speech.

“Are you actually going to impeach a president for speech that the Supreme Court would likely find protected under the First Amendment?” he asked.

As Democrats push for a “vicarious” snap impeachment, Turley said the party should be careful of setting such a precedent.

MADRID – Emergency crews in central Spain cleared 500 roads and rescued over 1,500 people stranded in their vehicles, allowing Madrid and other areas on Sunday to slowly shovel out of the country’s worst snowstorm in recent memory.

After recording 50 centimeters (20 inches) of snow in the Spanish capital between Friday night and Saturday, Madrid and a large swathe of the country remained impassable Sunday, with roads, rail lines and air travel disrupted by Storm Filomena. The blizzard has been blamed for four deaths.

More than 150 roads were still impassable Sunday. Authorities said all trips by car should be postponed and tire chains were obligatory for journeys that could not be avoided. They said all people trapped in their cars by the snow had been rescued, but hundreds of cars needed to be recovered after being abandoned by drivers.
